RABBI'S MESSAGE

Rabbi Michael Lerner, the author of the book, Jewish Renewal, interviewed 357 people between the ages of twenty and fifty in England, Canada, and the United States. He asked them what factors turned them off to synagogues and alienated them from organized religion. Many respondents felt that the Jewish world tried to teach them a parochialism of Jewish suffering. Too many Jews acted as though nobody else had ever suffered. The uniqueness of the Holocaust was then used as a way of dismissing the pain of everyone else. Many of my interviewees told me that they felt that the way the Jewish world used the Holocaust, they were essentially being asked to choose whose suffering was most important. They felt less inclined to be part of a Jewish world that emphasized the primacy of Jewish suffering and maintained that only the wellbeing of Jews mattered.

Dr. Michael Wyschogrod, the Professor Emeritus of Philosophy at Baruch College of the City University of New York, delivered a paper on January 28, 1986 at the mid-winter conference of the Rabbinical Council of America. Critiquing Rabbi Soloveitchik's landmark article, "Confrontation," he maintained that it was desirable for Orthodox Jewish leaders to engage in dialogue with Christian leaders. Such dialogue need not be confined to social problems. The stands that clergy take on the issues of the day stem from the teachings of their respective faith traditions. Therefore, theological discussion is integral to interfaith dialogue.

If interfaith cooperation is considered acceptable and desirable by mainstream orthodoxy, how much the more so does it apply to our reform congregation. I look upon non-Jewish leaders as partners in tikkun olam-repairing our world. Although our Holocaust survivors have suffered at the hands of non-Jews in the past and there is always the fear of assimilation, we dare not resort to "tribalism" and shy away from interfaith cooperation in our multi-cultural community. The ability to interact with non-Jews is a prerequisite for the modern rabbinate. As a reform rabbi, I often work with B'nai Mitzvah students with one non-Jewish parent. It is incumbent upon me to educate and make the non-Jewish parent feel comfortable with the service and to make the ceremony meaningful for non-Jewish family members and guests. As a reform rabbi, I teach Introduction to Judaism classes to non-Jews. My responsibility is to clearly communicate a brand new religious language and brand new rituals to people who have not grown up in the faith.

As a reform rabbi, I have participated in three different ministerial associations, played a central role in galvanizing an interfaith response to 9/11, and engaged in pulpit exchanges with a

Catholic priest, a Congregationalist minister, and an African-American Presbyterian minister. As a reform rabbi, I gave lectures at a Bible College under the auspices of the Jewish Chautauqua Society. As a reform rabbi, I taught comparative religion in Hebrew High Schools, brought students to churches and mosques, and facilitated discussion groups between Jewish teenagers and African-American teenagers and between Jewish teenagers and Muslim teenagers. This bit of revelation may seem astounding to some of you. However, this type of activity is quite commonplace throughout our movement.

Several months ago, the Uptown Church, contracted to use our sanctuary, our social hall, and some of our classrooms on Sunday mornings. In addition, I have established important contacts with the Hispanic community. Preparations are already under way for our first interfaith Thanksgiving service on the Sunday before this great American holiday. The opportunities for interfaith cooperation in the area of social action are endless.

Many of us remember that wonderful service that took place commemorating the 75th anniversary of Kristallnacht. We focused on the personal experience of six of our Holocaust survivors who were specifically impacted by Kristallnacht and connected them with teenagers from our Hebrew High. However, if the lessons of Kristallnacht are to be relevant to the next generation of Jews, they must inspire all of us to fulfill the mitzvah of loving the stranger.

As we enter the new Jewish year, 5775, may we at Hebrew Tabernacle promote a Judaism which integrates spirituality with community service, the "inside life" with the "outside life". May we also look beyond our immediate concerns, go beyond the walls of the synagogue, and serve our fellow human beings wherever they may live. May we continue to see ourselves as major players in Washington Heights and Inwood. As we integrate both the "inside life" and "outside life", may we ultimately become both a sanctuary of the spirit and a light to our multicultural community in Washington Heights.

SEPTEMBER/OCTOBER 2014 EXHIBIT EMMA CRAIG-Textile Artist GIFTS FROM NATURE

Artist's statement:

Emma Craig is an artist and teacher from the United Kingdom who has always been fascinated by journeys. Since 1995 she has been traveling from the British Isles to St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Tortola and now to Washington Heights-Inwood, New York where she lives, raising her own two daughters, making art, and teaching kids the joy of creativity.

Observing how people around the world make craft using found materials has influenced her work which can be made from structures of discarded Styrofoam packaging, hardened with many layers of flour based glue and paper to make Paper Mache. Paper Mache is an ancient, lightweight and surprisingly robust art form that can even be made into furniture. To Emma, it makes obvious use of the huge amount of paper and cardboard that we casually discard. She likes the idea of turning paper back into its original sturdy state and then disguising it as something else. As a textile artist, she spends a long time decorating each one and giving it a personality. She uses discarded coffee as paint and natural materials like bark and wood from rare or impressive trees like the Lignum Vitae and the Turpentine (Paper) Tree.

The shelves display artifacts of disappearing craft or everyday natural or intriguing things that we collect throughout our journey. A mini shrine to show off a tree that is becoming extinct, or a piece of coral from a dead reef Her pieces sometimes involve dying crafts from people whose work has been replaced by imports and she encourages us to reflect on the fragility of natural resources and the ingenuity of people who make things wherever we are.

Many of Ms. Craig's pieces are for sale with a portion of the proceeds being donated to the Hebrew Tabernacle. A price list is available.

SAVE THE DATE for our Annual Rummage Sale

Seeking Volunteers to Make this a Succes$

This year's Rummage Sale will be held on Sunday, December 7 and Monday, December 8 from 10am to 4 pm. Please begin to clean out your closets and cabinets, ask neighbors for their gently used items and pass the information on to your friends and community. This is the Hebrew Tabernacle's largest fund raiser and we so need the funds!

We will begin to accept donations right after the High Holy Days. Look for requests for volunteers at that time too!

Thank you in advance for your help and support.

Rose Ellen Neidish & Mike Klein, Co-Chairs
